THE WHITE COMPANY
LONDON

STATEMENT ON RESPONSIBLE LOBBYING

The White Company does not currently engage in direct lobbying activities intended to influence legislation, regulation, or public policy, and does not make financial or in-kind political contributions.

Should The White Company engage in direct public policy activities in the future, all engagement activities would be undertaken responsibly, transparently, and in alignment with our commitment to conducting business ethically and contributing positively to society and the environment. Any positions taken would be informed by reliable and evidence-based information.

Through our participation in industry associations and membership organisations, we advocate indirectly on topics that contribute positively to society and the environment such as mandatory human rights and environmental due diligence. We expect those organisations to operate in a manner consistent with our values and ethical standards.

The White Company maintains a zero-tolerance approach to bribery and corruption and provides channels for employees and stakeholders to raise concerns through existing grievance and whistleblowing procedures.

This approach is overseen by The White Company's leadership team and reviewed periodically as part of our governance processes.
